Economic Development Rate

At SDG&E®, we believe that when your business thrives, our community benefits. That's why we're offering the Economic Development Rate (EDR), an energy discount designed to help eligible businesses grow, stay or relocate within our service territory.

What is EDR?

The EDR program was designed to support business growth and job creation in our community. By offering a 12% discount on the electric portion of the monthly bill for up to 5 years, the program helps to attract, retain or expand company operations within SDG&E's service territory – encouraging companies to stay in California rather than locate out of state.

Eligibility Requirements

To qualify your business must meet one of the following criteria:

- Non-residential, non-governmental business customers considering relocation out of state.
- Business at risk of ceasing operations in California without the benefit of the EDR.

- Business relocating into SDG&E's service territory from outside of California.
- Business customers receive electric service through:
  - SDG&E (electric generation and/delivery).
  - Community Choice Aggregation (CCA) or Direct Access (DA).<sup>**</sup>

Program Limitations

The EDR is available until the program cap, a total of 40 Mega-Watts (MW), is reached. This total is divided into two groups based on business size:

- 10 MW is reserved for businesses that use 150 kilowatts (kW) or less.
- 30 MW is available for businesses that use more than 150 kW.

How to enroll in the program

To get started, complete and submit the EDR interest form to receive more information about the application process.

Maintaining Eligibility

Once enrolled, businesses must:

- Create and/or retain jobs in California.
- Provide documentation showing out-of-state relocation options or operational scenarios.
- Sign an affidavit confirming EDR influenced the decision to relocate within SDG&E's service territory.

Your partners at SDG&E know that if we can help you grow your business, you'll be able to create more jobs in our community.
