From month to month, your energy use changes and so does your energy bill. Both may go up or down with changes in the weather and the way you use appliances, lights and other devices in your home or business.

Balance out the highs and lows

You can have a more predictable energy bill simply by signing up for our Level Pay Plan. It automatically evens out the monthly highs and lows so your energy bills are more consistent. When you know what to expect, it's easier to plan your budget.

Here's how it works

With Level Pay, the starting point is the average dollar amount for your last 12 SDG&E® bills. You'll be billed this same amount for the first three months, even if your energy use varies.

Your payment amount may be adjusted once every three months, as your actual energy use is factored into your rolling 12-month average.

When you know what to expect, it's easier to plan your budget.

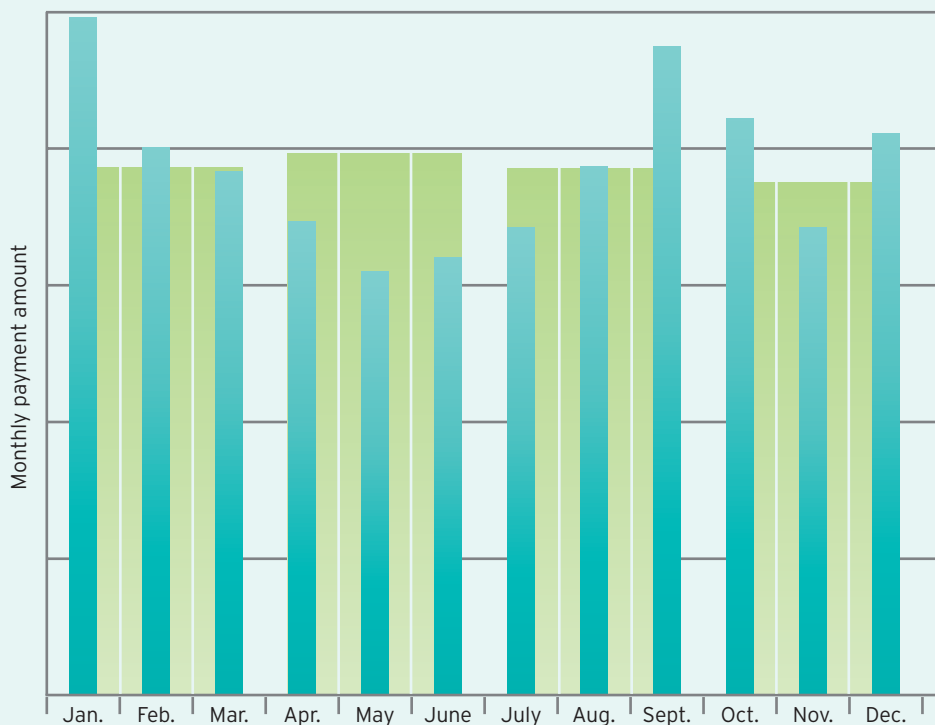

On every monthly bill, you'll still see how much energy you actually used and the cost, which may be more or less than the amount you pay that month under the Level Pay Plan.

Budget planning simplified

The total amount you owe for 12 months of energy use will be the same, whether or not you choose this option. Level Pay simply spreads out your payments more evenly. This can help you manage your budget better.

Level Pay comparison

Smooth out fluctuations in your SDG&E bill with our Level Pay Plan. It keeps your monthly payment amount the same for three months at a stretch, with adjustments made quarterly instead of monthly to reflect your energy use.
